Re: [AI Enablement Manager / related title]

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the [AI Enablement Manager] role at [Company] as a capable visionary who makes a meaningful contribution wherever she is. I see where a system needs to go, then I leave CRM, reporting, and operating cadence people can run after the kickoff slides are gone. That is how I work in whatever room I enter — manufacturing, managed IT, national food-tech, high-touch travel, or a public energy brief I was not trained to write.

The proof is in the contributions, not the title. At Blue Technologies I turned complex infrastructure into Quality Business Reviews leadership could fund, cut monthly churn 15%, and held 90% average CSAT. At Best Food Trucks I set direction for a distributed team and a platform serving 100K+ monthly users, tying CRM and behavioral data to retention rather than one-off campaigns. At Cogent I automated digital intake and reduced call volume 80%. At Paradise Unlocked I directed a public, cited reading of DOE FECM's 2022 Strategic Vision — lock-in tests and chapter-checked tools for organizers, agencies, and operators — because a non-specialist who can still leave something useful is the kind of colleague I intend to be for you.

I am completing MIT Professional Education's Applied Agentic AI for Organizational Transformation with Prof. John Williams and Dr. Abel Sanchez so that same pattern scales to generative and agentic tools: connecting agents to the CRM and data stacks I already run, taking a pilot to daily practice, and keeping adoption inside governance, agent-risk literacy, testing, and ethics. I am not applying as a research scientist. I am applying as someone who can set the path and then run enablement like a product: clear problem statements, prioritized use cases, training people will use, and KPIs for adoption, time saved, quality, and risk.

I would be glad to talk about how this role's hardest problem maps to vision, intake, and a contribution your team can feel in the first two quarters. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
Nicole Jury
